Languages

There are over six thousand languages in the world. Mandarin Chinese is the most commonly spoken language. It has over one billion speakers. Spanish and English are the next most common languages. They each have around three hundred million speakers.

People express important ideas with language. Language also helps them connect with other people. When you speak a language, you are part of a large group of people who express ideas in the same way. When you are around people who speak a different language, you may feel like an outsider.

Learning a language is also important for brain development. If children don't learn a language, their brains will not develop in a normal way. Children who not taught any language cannot understand concepts.

All children normally learn at one language fluently by around the of seven. After that, it becomes difficult for older children to learn first language.

Many people in the only speak a single language. There large areas of the world where speak only one main language. Many Americans only English, for example, though to from college you must usually take two of classes in a foreign language. older people who come to the United States other countries speak only the language where they are from.

Young people come to the United States from countries almost always learn English, even they may go on speaking their language at home or with their .

Many people speak far more than one two languages. There are small areas the world where people speak hundreds different languages. These are called language spots. One well-known language hot spot Papua New Guinea, which has more eight hundred languages. In contrast, the bigger Saudi Arabia has only nine .

Many scientists and teachers say that is very beneficial to speak two more languages. People who can speak two more languages are called “bilingual.” If speak more than one language you find more friends, and you will have a wider choice of jobs do when you are older. Being or “multilingual” is also good for able to travel other places.

Languages disappearing. As Chinese, Spanish, and English around the world, smaller languages die . This is because speakers of these languages die. Or they may decide be part of bigger language communities, Spanish or English. Then they may pass on their native language to young.

Scientists worry about language death. is because languages may contain special . Languages are libraries. They contain lots information about the world.

When languages , information is lost. Languages in the
